[Development of cognitive impairment in Parkinson's disease]. Cognitive impairment is a frequent symptom in Parkinson's disease. Yet, most of the studies on cognitive functions have been carried out on PD patients at the early stages of the disease. This study was aimed at investigating the rate of cognitive impairment in a large sample of PD patients in the very early stages of the disease. After a neurological examination, PD patients were selected from a movement disorders clinic if they showed no cognitive symptoms at examination (Hoehn and Yahr stage I). These patients were followed-up for a mean period of 24 months. During this period, patients received oral therapy to control parkinsonian symptoms. At inclusion, and at 24-month follow-up examination, patients were assessed using a battery of neuropsychological tests. Cognitive impairment was defined as a score of 1.5 SD below the normal mean of each test. At inclusion, 37 patients were included (54% males, mean age: 66 years). The rate of cognitive impairment in the entire sample was 32%. A significant decrease of the score of the Mini Mental State Examination test and the Mini Mental State Examination recall test occurred at 24 months. Cognitive impairment in PD was not affected by the antiparkinsonian treatment. In this cohort of PD patients who were not receiving antiparkinsonian treatment, 32% developed cognitive impairment over a period of 24 months. These data suggest that cognitive impairment is a frequent complication of Parkinson's disease, especially in the early stages of the disease.

Erythrocyte O₂-motive ATPase in different families of benthic fishes of the southern Baltic Sea. The ATPase activity in the soluble fraction of erythrocyte hemolysates was determined in specimens of 13 families of fishes, in benthic (bivalves, polychaetes, ascidians) and pelagic (cod, herring, perch) fishes from the southern Baltic Sea.
